HEADMISTRESS FOR SCEGGS

The Chairman of the School Council of SCEGGS Darlinghurst, Mr D. S. Clarke, recently announced the appointment of Miss Diana Bowman as the new Principal of the School.

Miss Bowman's appointment will be effective from first term 1978.

This appointment follows the previously announced retirement of Miss Barbara Chisholm, the present Principal of the School, following a career of 31 years in that position.

Miss Chisholm had originally intended to retire at the end of 1975 but in view of the difficulties then confronting the School, she was persuaded to continue in office for a further two years.

Miss Bowman is an Old Girl of SCEGGS Darlinghurst and was the first student to receive the SCEGGS Council Scholarship for Tertiary Education.

CHRISTIAN NATIONALS HQ DEDICATION

Saturday, September 3rd, saw the much awaited Dedication of an Australian Headquarters for the Christian Nationals' Evangelism Council. The meeting took place in the newly built auditorium at the Sydney Missionary and Bible College, Badminton Road, Croydon.

170 people attended the function. The guest speaker was the Rev Allen B. Finley, International President of CNEC.

Mr Arthur Sindel, Chairman of the CNEC Board, brought greetings from members of the organisation around the world. Mr Sindel also related the story behind the purchase of the property, located at 35a Badminton Road, Croydon, three houses away from the SMBC.

"A gift of $50 started things moving. Last year we had $700 in hand, towards this project. From December to today there has been a clear indication of what the Lord has done. Over $28,000 has been received, leaving only $23,000 still needed." The offering at the meeting reduced that amount by a further $600!

Mrs Glad Barr, Hon Secretary, spoke of the Vision and Challenge of CNEC. Describing some of the work overseas, Mrs Barr told of a church where the members not only increase their missionary offering every year, but also have started a new pledge idea.

Each year a pledge is undertaken, by faith, to introduce a certain number of new people to the church. The result has been a growing church, with full seating!

"What are we doing with our empty churches and what are we doing with what God has entrusted to us?" asked Mrs Barr.

Chairman of the meeting, Canon Roy F. Gray, introduced Rev Allen B. Finley who spoke of the Temple in the Scriptures and its purpose.

"It had a purpose to serve. It housed the Ark of the Covenant; the Ten Commandments' Tablets; the Mercy Seat was there behind the Veil; the Holiest of Holies; it was a sacred and wonderful place. But it had a temporary function!

The Veil would be rent in twain! No longer would there be a priest alone who could go in, but Christ — once and for all — would enter into the Holiest of Holies on our behalf."

Today a Moslem Mosque is on that very same spot.

"Jesus moved their minds from the earthly to the heavenly. If we are more rightly related to Eternity, we will be more rightly related to life, here and now!"

"The things we have used in the light of Eternity." "God reminds us, on this day of dedication, that what we must do, we must do NOW."

"God doesn't dwell in the new building. He dwells and works through our lives and don't forget. He understands other languages too."

"The Church in Korea is growing rapidly. The younger churches are getting the missionary challenge."

WOMEN'S GROUP GOES PUBLIC

The group responsible for the protest on women's role in the church, outside St Andrews Cathedral at the beginning of General Synod (ACR September 15) is called Anglican Women Concerned.

The group is about 20 strong according to the Rev Bruce Wilson of St Georges Paddington and in addition to some women members of his congregation has members from several other Sydney parishes. According to Mr Wilson these are: St Mark's, Darling Point; St Matthias', Centennial Park; St Stephen's, Newtown; St Peter's, Mortdale; St Gile's, Greenwich; and St James', Turramurra.

Mr Wilson told the Church Record that the group has been meeting for two years to study all the relevant literature on the place of women in the church.

The protest outside the cathedral was the first public activity of the group. Mr Wilson said there are no official office bearers, however, the spokesperson for the protest was Miss Colleen Stewart, a parishioner of St George's, Paddington.

The same group distributed a leaflet during the Sydney Diocesan Synod in support of women's ordination. The action was challenged by a Synod member and the president informed the Synod that the group had no authority to distribute literature within the Chapter House where Synod was meeting.

Mr Wilson told the Church Record that he was concerned that the caption to a photo in the ACR on September 15, suggested, that the protest literature on the place of women in the church, was organised by St George's, Paddington. "Anglican Women Concerned," he said, "is a voluntary organisation having no official connection with St George's, Paddington."

BIBLE SOCIETY SEC FOR WEST AUST

Mr Trevor G. Booth who for the last ten years has been the Bible Society's aerial colporteur throughout the North West and North of Western Australia, will be the next State Secretary of the Bible Society in Western Australia.

Mr Booth will succeed the Reverend Keith Bricknell as State Secretary later this year, when Mr Bricknell moves to Queensland to take up the State Secretary's position in that State. It is hoped that an Induction and Farewell Service can be arranged in Perth for late November, prior to the Society's Annual General Meeting on November 28 at Bible House.

Mr Booth has served the Society most effectively since 1958, firstly as a Deputationalist and then as Field Secretary in Perth. Then, prompted by his initiative and vision, the Society started the unique aerial ministry into the Northern regions of Western Australia.

The Booth family moved to Carnarvon almost 10 years ago, and from this base Mr Booth began his program of visitation to stations, towns and missions, not only in Western Australia, but also into the Northern Territory and to mission areas of Queensland and South Australia.

His ministry of visitation, sharing the Scriptures and commending the faith, has involved clergy in each region that he has visited. He has been greatly appreciated by both the churches and the people.

He is ably supported in the work by his wife, Beris, and their family, Peter who is working in Perth, Margaret and Julie who are in high school and Phillip and Leon who are in primary school. The family is involved in the work of the Carnarvon Church of Christ.

Mr Booth's move to Perth does not mean a withdrawal from the Society's commitment to its aerial ministry as such, but it will be used as a time for reassessing the location and operation of the aircraft program.

GROWING THREAT OF DRUG TRAFFIC

The recent Australian tour by Dr Hardin B. Jones, PhD; the reports of Mafia involvement in marijuana growing; kidnappings and executions, show how serious the drug problem has become in Australia.

Any use of the term "soft" to describe marijuana is fallacious. Its results are certainly hard or harmful in our society!

Medical evidence of the harmfulness of marijuana — 30 times more harmful than alcohol — should mean an end to the term "soft drug".

Rev Fred Nile said: "The pro-marijuana lobbies, such as Cannabis Research Foundation and others, have continued to argue for the legalisation of marijuana and a Marijuana Board so as to improve its quality, and remove the link with heroin and organised crime."

"The only Board we need is a permanent Board to discourage the use of marijuana and eradicate illegal drugs from our society."

"Organised crime is very anxious to support the legalisation of marijuana. There are reliable reports from the USA that over $2 million has been used to bribe politicians to legalise marijuana — first decriminalise pot usage, then pot growing, finally legalisation of marijuana."

"In the USA there are an estimated 45 million marijuana users, including 10 million heavy pot users. There are over 3 million heroin addicts, which are the most profitable source of Mafia income — over $5 billion annual turnover from drugs!"

"The heroin addicts come from the huge pool of marijuana users. It is therefore in the interests of the Mafia to legalise marijuana; expand the marijuana users from 45 million to 90 million, and so to double the percentage of heroin addicts from 3 million to 6 million!"

"The NSW Royal Commission into Drugs should continue its investigations to discover what links exist between pro-marijuana lobbies, politicians and academics, and the multi-million dollar profits from illegal drugs," said Mr Nile.

LAMBETH CONFERENCE PREPARATIONS

Four hundred Anglican bishops from all over the world, including all Australian diocesan bishops, will attend the Lambeth Conference, July 22 to August 13, 1978, at the University of Kent, England.

Lambeth Conferences, chaired by the Archbishop of Canterbury, are held every ten years.

They do not legislate, but have considerable moral influence in the Anglican Church and beyond.

In three respects the 1978 Lambeth Conference differs from its predecessors.

For the first time the Conference will be residential. Also the Anglican world family is now composed almost entirely of autonomous Churches with indigenous leadership. And the agenda has a different emphasis.

The agenda aims at thinking what the Church and its ministry are for, rather than at pronouncements and at recommending courses of action.

Any such thinking must try to see the world and its people as they are, and the major influences that affect their lives. Hence one main approach is "Today's Church and Today's World".

PAUL WHITE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY

The 41st book to be written by Dr Paul White, better known to most as the author of the Jungle Doctor books and fables, was recently released in Australia. Appropriately, it is the author's autobiography or, to use the Jungle Doctor's own more colourful expression, "my life with the lid off".

This book in some ways has been the most difficult book Paul White has ever had to write. In describing the book, and his reason for writing it, Paul White says:

"This autobiography has taken sixty-seven years to live and six to write. Alias Jungle Doctor is planned to be a working book — to entertain and also to have practical usefulness when it tells of targets that have been hit or missed, and why. It is easy to write about the sunshine in my life but describing the shadows and scars has been hard but necessary. So often I've been told, 'You can't understand. It hasn't happened to you.' But it has and it's there in black and white."

Some special discussions are envisaged on particular subjects such as relations with other Churches, the ordination of women, training for all kinds of ministry, the role of the Anglican Communion.

Media representatives will be welcome. Most sessions will be open to the public. Accreditation will be necessary.

Any Australian media interested in accreditation are invited to contact General Synod Press Officer, Alan Nichols, St Andrew's House, Sydney Square, 2000.

MELBOURNE TO HOST WCC CONFERENCE ON MISSION AND EVANGELISM

Melbourne has been chosen as the site for the 1980 conference of the World Council of Churches on Mission and Evangelism. This conference will be the 70th anniversary of the 1910 Edinburgh mission conference which is generally recognised as the beginning of the modern ecumenical movement.

For the first time the World Council of Churches will hold a major conference in Australia and it will be the first major world conference on mission and evangelism since the Bangkok conference on Salvation Today held in 1972.

Under the theme "Your Kingdom Come", Dr Emilio Castro of the WCC Commission on World Mission and Evangelism has suggested "four areas of concern that deserve the attention of the conference: 1. Search first the Kingdom and its justice; 2. The proclamation of the Gospel in different cultures; 3. How to be parables of the Kingdom today; 4. Common witness on a natural and world level."

The decision to hold the conference in Melbourne was taken by the ACC Executive Committee after considering the advantages and disadvantages of Sydney and Melbourne.

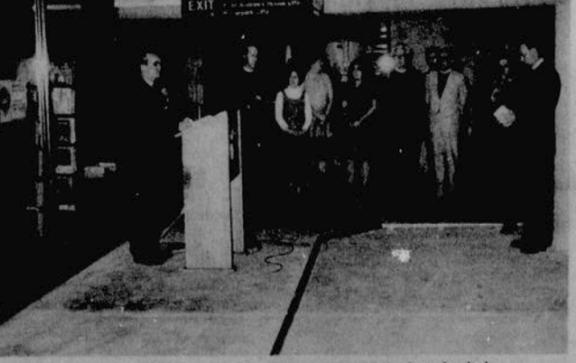

A planning committee of representatives from WCC member churches in Australia and also from other churches such as the Roman Catholic Church will not commence planning for the 300-400 strong 1980 conference.

New outlet for Christian education

The bookshop of the Board of Education has moved to bright new premises in St. Andrew's House Arcade. The new shop was opened by the Archbishop, and Bishop Robinson, the Chairman of the Board, gave the address.

The name "Insight Resources" was chosen to highlight the role this bookshop will take. It will provide resource material for people involved in Christian education in particular, and even education in general. Not only are there aids such as flannelgraphs and charts, but hardware such as cassette recorders and resource books on Christian Education method, practise and theory.

The shop has a central position in the arcade at the foot of the escalators into St Andrew's House. Cynthia Johnstone and Daphne Joy, the two ladies who help run the shop, are hoping this new position will be more convenient, both for people who use materials published by the Board (Trowel and Sword) and for others wanting help with their educational work. If their few days of trading are any indication, the shop should be quite a success.

NOTES & COMMENTS

Crisis in education

How much longer must we wait for the Education Departments to reverse the pendulum swing of innovative education in our schools.

The latest document from the NSW Department of Education is a case in point. It speaks in general terms of philosophical aims such as "moral autonomy" rather than the detailed learning objectives specified in past documents.

Parents and others must surely wonder at and be concerned about aims like "To guide individual development in the context of society through recognisable stages of development towards perceptive understanding, mature judgement, responsible self-direction and moral autonomy".

The obvious change in emphasis is from teaching content to learning methods. In the past teachers were given detailed curriculum stating the skills and knowledge to be mastered by pupils at each stage of their schooling. Reading, writing and numerical skills were at the call of primary education.

For a rich and full life in our complex society one needs to be able to read, do simple mathematics and be able to express oneself in a written form. Just try getting a secure and meaningful job if you can't fill in an application form.

Recently employers and tertiary institutions have been complaining of the woeful and frightening reading abilities of many school leavers who come to them for interviews.

We would have expected these complaints to be noted and allowed for in the new "primary aims" document, but this is not the case. Instead reference to the child's capacity in "speaking, listening, reading, writing, spelling etc" that were found in the previous "aims" document has been deleted.

Of equal concern is the reference to responsible "self-direction" and "moral autonomy". What does "self-direction" mean and what is "moral autonomy"? How self-directive can a nine-year-old be? Some proponents of "open plan" education are quite confident that young children can direct a lot of their own learning. The results of open plan education in other countries are not quite so encouraging, especially where they have been using this method for a longer period than we. Younger children need clear procedures, definite directions and firm discipline if they are to develop into well-balanced and secure people.

Christian and other responsible parents and citizens ought to make their views known about the trends in school education. Parents should be active at the local school level by discussing with the administration and staff how it will interpret and implement these broad "aims of primary education" for that school.

If the decline in education standards are the philosophical drift in official aims continue Christian parents will have to look more closely at the expensive church school system or the newer mushrooming parent controlled schools.

New Archbishop of Melbourne

The election of the Rt Rev Robert Dann as Archbishop of Melbourne was a surprising choice to many. Bishop Dann was the Chairman of the Board of Electors which was deadlocked for so long over such other names as Bishop Donald Cameron.

Bishop Dann is to be congratulated on his election and should have the prayers of all Anglicans as he embarks on the heavy responsibilities as Archbishop of Australia's second largest diocese.

This is the first occasion that Melbourne has had a new Archbishop for twenty years. The system of a small board to appoint an Archbishop is in contrast to the system existing in NSW. There the Synods as a whole elects the Bishops or Archbishop, as the case may be, in a session closed to the public and the media.

This is essentially a more just system. It is quite wrong that the holder of such an important office should be elected by a small group in which temptations to make deals and the opportunities for individuals to obstruct the majority are so great.

It is far better for the chief pastor of a diocese to be elected by the synod, comprising as it does the clergy who will have to serve under his authority and a large number of representative laymen who are elected to safeguard the interests of the parishes.

The office of Bishop is too important to be left in the hands of a small number.

South African shame

The behaviour of the South African Government in arresting opponents of its racial policies and suppressing basic human rights of the overwhelming majority of its citizens has justly earned the condemnation of the civilised world for many years.

South Africa, which some might say has received a disproportionate degree of world criticism, apparently had been trying to repair its image in recent months. For example there has been a relaxation in the limitations on racial racial sport.

However the recent death under suspicious circumstances of black activist (the latest of many), Steve Biko, the clamp down in the freedom of the press, both black and white, including the harassment of journalists has exposed that nation to much deserved condemnation.

South Africa, a self acclaimed Christian nation, claims to be working for the ultimate good of the black majority yet it employs methods as ruthless and cruel as any atheistic police state.

It is hard to escape the conclusion that it wants to serve the interests of the blacks only so long as the economic and political interests of the white minority are not hurt.

ON & OFF THE RECORD

By David Hewetson

PREACHING

What IS a sermon? Or rather, what is preaching? Is it a Bible study in church? Or is it something else again? No doubt one's answers to these rather trite questions will differ from other's answers, depending on one's background, tradition, pre-suppositions, etc.

SERMONISING

A mystique has, of course, gathered around the pulpit. The act of preaching a sermon has taken on a particular stance which may in many cases be quite far removed from what the New Testament means by "preaching".

Perhaps we should entitle our contemporary activity "sermonising" so as to remove any confusions from people's minds concerning the proclamation of the Gospel and the more didactic activity of instructing believers, etc.

Well, "sermonising" will do me. It is an activity of which I am not ashamed. I even have my own ready-made definition that you may borrow or discard just as it suits you.

The sermon is, I believe, a "verbal essay", ie, a discourse on a topic which may or may not be a text or passage of Scripture. I would go along with those who think that it should most often be the latter, in which case the correct term for it is "expository preaching".

VARIED DIET

But I do not go along with those who think there should be no other kind of preaching. Exposition should be the staple diet, but it should be balanced from time to time with a wide and more panoramic approach.

I would go so far as to say that I believe that those who never hear anything else but exposition are in danger of getting a very piecemeal view of the Bible and of the Christian faith. I firmly believe that there is a great necessity to "get it all together" in doctrinal, topical and "panoramic" sermons from time to time.

I agree with those who believe in preaching series of sermons. I think this a great way to cover large stretches of Biblical material in a systematic way. It also obviates the preacher's malaise of getting right up to Saturday night chopping and changing, and choosing and refusing his subject.

It is a great thing to know on Monday what you will be on next Sunday. And as soon as time permits for preparation there is less messing around. I have also found it helpful in that preaching a Biblical series forces me to stock up on good commentaries on the particular book being preached about. It does not quite seem to hurt so much when you put your hand in your pocket to pay for them!

There was a crowd of typical Australian conservative suburbanites; dressed, not in beads and flowing robes, but in the more orthodox and sensible style of your average Anglican. There were students, and older people of

DULLNESS AVOIDED?

Finally, I believe that if one looks upon the sermon as a "verbal essay" one can more easily avoid dullness. And some of the correct pulpit-based Bible studies that are being offered these days are (they tell me) exceedingly dull and dreary. An essay picks up the subject and carries it along.

It takes pains to introduce it properly; it never loses sight of it in the verbiage and the footnotes that a sequential treatment of a passage can deteriorate into; it applies the subject and pushes it home to the hearer. But, then, maybe you do not agree with me. Or do you?

FOL and RC bishops attack divorce law

The Festival of Light fully supports the Submission by the Roman Catholic National Bishops' Conference recently held in Sydney.

The Submission, signed on behalf of the Australian Episcopal Conference by its President, James Cardinal Freeman, urged the Federal Government to review the Family Law Act immediately.

The Submission contains twelve points dealing with the serious limitations of the Act, and the dramatic escalation in divorces, with the subsequent breakdown of family life.

The Rev Fred Nile (National Co-ordinator of the Festival of Light) said:

"Recent reports from the USA clearly show the link between family disorganisation and the growing teenage alienation with its by-products of drug use and violence.

"Our society has to take urgent action to reverse the factors which are causing this family disorganisation — the breakdown of the community, the neighbourhood and the family, and the rise in the number of homes from which the father is absent.

"The absence of a father can be the result of a divorce, work pressures and social pressures, etc.

"More and more children are being placed in child care centres, or coming home from school to an empty house, or, at best, a single parent.

"The 'family wage' concept should be re-introduced to reduce the economic pressures which are forcing many reluctant mothers to work, and so placing more strain on the marriage.

"Urgent action is needed to strengthen the family as the basic and natural unit of our society," said Mr Nile.

Christians' petition in USSR

A "Sydney Morning Herald" headline recently declared: "The faithful take on the Kremlin". Taking on the Kremlin is not a healthy exercise especially for Russian citizens but that is what is happening in the city of Gorky where one thousand seven hundred Christians have signed a petition asking the Government to re-open one of the city's closed Churches.

This was stated by the Rev Bernard Judd.

The City Gorky, on the Volga River, with a population of 1½ million, was once a great religious centre but only 3 small churches are allowed to operate.

This is another evidence that, quite apart from outright persecution, a polity of restriction and impediment dogs the Christian Cause. It is true, that things in Moscow where some additional "house-churches" have been allowed to open.

To sign such a petition is an act of courage. There are no medals or prizes for such action. The State has had a lot of practice in devising nasty reprisals for people who rock the boat by actions such as this.

It is a sign of a nation-wide resurgence of religious interest 60 years after the 1917 Revolution. The Old Bolsheviks were confident that the Christian Faith would wither away. Instead, it is growing in numbers and quality.

The man who organised the petition estimates that there are 150,000 believers in Gorky and that 60 infants are baptised every Sunday. Gleb Yakunin, a Russian

by Canon John Chapman

Luke 24, 44-47

"Then he said to them 'These are my words which I spoke to you, while I was still with you, that everything written about me in the law of Moses and the prophets and the psalms must be fulfilled.' Then he opened their minds to understand the scripture and said to them, 'Thus it is written that Christ must suffer and on the third day rise from the dead, and that repentance and forgiveness of sins must be preached in his name to all nations, beginning from Jerusalem'."

These words are spoken by Jesus after his resurrection to the disciples in the upper room. Notice the three imperatives:

1. Everything written in the scriptures MUST be fulfilled. God's plans are not made up 'on the spur of the moment'. The scripture, since it is the Word of God, must come to pass. The scenes about Jesus have been painted on a broad canvas — Moses — the Prophets — the Psalms.
2. Christ must suffer and rise again. Even as it was inevitable that the scripture must be fulfilled, the same inevitability surrounded the death and resurrection of the Christ because of the content of the scriptures. It was through the cross and resurrection that Satan was defeated and we are assured of our right standing before God.
3. The Gospel must be preached... to all nations. The third imperative shows us that the world-wide proclamation of the Gospel is at the very heart of God's purposes. The scriptures must be fulfilled — Christ must suffer and rise again — the gospel must be preached. The obligation to make Christ known is not some optional extra — it is at the very centre of God's purposes. Do pray for us in BDM and all God's people that we will be caught up with its inevitability.

URANIUM DEBATE — A LONG WAY TO GO

It had to be more than idle curiosity which brought together about 80 people on the Saturday of Sydney's rugby league grand final, with the sun shining invitingly, to study "a Christian perspective on the energy crisis."

That was the uncharismatic title given to the day's programme, which a large group of men and women considered to be sufficiently important for them to put aside the real temptation to spend their time on more pleasurable activities.

The other significant factor about the group who gathered at Sydney Missionary and Bible College was that they were the antithesis of the alternative life-style-cum-hippie protest movement too often identified with environmental and conservation causes.

Here was a crowd of typical Australian conservative suburbanites; dressed, not in beads and flowing robes, but in the more orthodox and sensible style of your average Anglican. There were students, and older people of varied walks of life, including a school teacher who said she had come to learn so that she could give more informed replies to questions of her pupils.

There was a theological student or two who felt that it was important to consider how man's stewardship of the earth's energy resources matched Biblical teaching on the subject.

Rather than being a group of environmental fanatics doing their own thing, it seemed that these people were representative of a growing number of the so-called silent majority (including Christians) who are anxious to understand the realities behind the world's energy problems.

Those who attended the conference were made to realise straight away that the energy crisis, and the Australian uranium debate, are only part of a much more far-reaching problem.

Behind it lay the world's population crisis; twice as many births as deaths in a number of places; half the world hungry; the problem of more and more people, and meeting their needs, is inevitably bound up with energy.

But why should Christians be involved in the energy crisis?

Rev Ward Powers, an economist as well as a cleric, explained that this issue, and the pros and cons of nuclear energy and uranium mining, was basically a theological, ethical and moral question. "It cannot be left to scientists, technologists and politicians to decide on behalf of the rest of us," he said.

In a matter of moral judgement, such people had no special mandate to act as our conscience — and no special competence to do so either.

Moral and ethical questions which Christians ought to consider included the way non-renewable resources were used; whether energy use should be restrained; the fact that some countries used vital resources wastefully, while others endured small supplies and shortages; and the question of whether some vital resources should be completely used up during the next generation, or conserved for future generations. (Under present trends the world's oil will be exhausted in our own generation.)

The first priority was to become aware of the facts, and to consider the motivation for arguments put forward on both sides of the dispute (such as the uranium mining debate).

One then had to look at relevant Biblical teaching: on the value of the individual; responsibility of care and concern about the welfare of fellow men; the role of secular authority as God-given and for the benefit of people; man as steward and custodian of the planet and its resources.

Looking at the moral aspect of the Fraser Government's decision to export uranium, Rev Powers summed up by saying that the real appeal of the Government's policy was to self-interest: jobs and exports, which both spelled money.

"The argument to justify this attitude is that if we don't sell it, someone else will." The same argument could be used in support of the heroin trade.

Mr Fraser had said Australian exports of uranium would provide more energy for an energy deficient world. But not everyone agreed that nuclear energy was the best answer to this problem.

If less energy sources were available a re-examination of energy use would be necessary. Would this be a good or bad thing? Mr Fraser had said that Australian uranium mining exports would help the Third World. But the Third World would not be helped.

They could not afford nuclear power plants, apart from which this highly centralised form of power production was quite inappropriate for the needs of poorer countries.

"To say Third World countries are being considered is a palliative to quieten our consciences," Rev Powers said.

Wind powered generators could, in many places, supply the needs of village communities for generations. Far more research was needed on such energy sources as the sun and wind.

Third World countries needed distributed power at a price they could afford — not centralised power at a price they could not afford.

Dr Keith Suter supported this view. "Quite suddenly some Western politicians have discovered that the Third World, or part of it, is allegedly interested in buying Australian uranium. They claim that there is a moral obligation to sell the 'energy-hungry' Third World our uranium."

by Michael Charles

This view was not valid. "The 'energy-hungry' world is not the same as the 'hungry world'." Some moderately rich Third World countries would like uranium, for weapons as well as energy, but nuclear technology was too advanced for the limited resources of most.

Dr Suter, a graduate in international law and international relations, said this fact was clearly evident at a meeting of national representatives he had attended. Apart from this, to buy uranium would be to come under the increasing economic control of multinational companies.

civilisation was on the way out; answers needed to be found for the future.

An advantage of the present uranium debate had been to attract considerable middle class interest in national politics.

Unfortunately the Government had allowed little public debate on this issue, and the Uranium Producers' Forum would not attend public meetings, preferring to spend money on advertising.

People like the Friends of the Earth, on the other side of the argument, had no money for advertisements. They were left with addressing one-sided meetings. The result was a denial of civil liberty.

A different point of view was presented by Mr Lesley

This is the first of a number of articles which will aim at ventilating the Uranium question. Michael Charles is a journalist who is at present studying at Moore Theological College, Sydney.

HEADMASTER SETS OUT STANDARDS

A Sydney headmaster urges his staff to communicate with their students on both the academic and emotional levels.

"The young do not regard themselves as disembodied intelligentsia, nor tool making animals, but creatures of flesh and blood with feelings, instincts, and passions, and certainly most of our teaching is dry, academic and cerebral."

The headmaster of Trinity Grammar School, Summer Hill & Strathfield, Mr Roderick West made this statement at a Staff Conference held recently with 32 members of his staff, who gathered to formulate a Self-Evaluation Manual for their school.

Mr West raised many problems which every teacher is facing in his attempt to communicate with his pupils.

"Why is it becoming increasingly harder to capture the interest of pupils?" he asked.

"In the past two hundred years, communication has extended in different directions and so has our life style and our thinking, but education may have been left behind. It is helpful to examine the trend of thought from the 18th century."

The 18th Century dictum of Descartes: Cogito ergo sum — I think, therefore I am.

This gave place to the following century to: Facio ergo sum — I make, therefore I am.

But the emphasis in the 20th century, the age of technology: Sentio ergo sum — I feel, therefore I am.

"We have emphasised the cold and analytical life of reason and have neglected the life of fantasy and feeling, that the young these days want not cerebration but celebration," he stated.

Mr West went on to say that most teachers are cerebral in their methods and do not allow enough room for our feelings. "Many a good boy has been turned off literature, history, science, mathematics, for life because of unimaginative teaching."

"But I wish to sound a grave note of warning for it is not simply a question of celebration. It is a question of how we celebrate and, more importantly, what we celebrate. For Francis of Assisi, celebration meant singing a canticle to the sun."

He stressed that today, celebration means not only festivity and fantasy, but also orgy and derangement; not only love and tenderness, but lust and aggression; not only fun and games but also cruelty and sadism.

The headmaster described a recent example from his own family.

"My 12-year-old daughter returned from school the other day and told her mother that the entire class was in tears when her English teacher read, with deep feeling, from 'David Copperfield', the account of the death of David's mother."

He said that that illustration showed the answer to boredom in the classroom was not to cast aside the great literature of the past and introduce something more modern, but rather to teach that literature with power and feeling.

Mr West felt that teaching is not like inducing a chemical reaction. "It is much more like planting a garden or writing a friendly letter. You must throw your heart and soul into it and realise that it cannot all be done by formulae, otherwise you will spoil your work."

"A great scientist and a great teacher was Louis Agassiz who founded the teaching of Zoology and Geology at Harvard. Agassiz always brought in specimens to describe what he was talking about. He would display a tank of shark embryos or hand round a fossil or give each of his hearers a grasshopper to hold and examine while he talked."

Continuing his talk to Trinity School staff, Mr West said that it was important to keep values simple in setting up criteria for evaluating.

"One hears a lot these days of education for living and schools pride themselves in providing services that 20 years ago would have been unheard of — for example, films and lectures on drug taking or the dangers of alcohol and smoking, driver training and maintenance, etc."

He said there is a danger that such activities become central rather than peripheral.

"One must always keep clearly in mind that our essential purpose is to wrestle with each boy until he can read fluently, express himself clearly, write legibly and succinctly, add, subtract and divide."

He stated that if boys are to go out into the world confidently and with a proper self-esteem, then it is a knowledge of these basic skills that will provide the most stable basis for adulthood.

More on the Myth of God Incarnate

Sir,
How refreshing to know that there are Christians like Mrs M. Gibson (ACR 3/10/77) who truly believe in the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures.

She may rest assured that the recent publication "The Myth of God Incarnate" has been publicly refuted in Britain by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Coggan in a sermon at Waltham, Kent.

He compared the authors to the scholars of Jesus' time and commented that "It was the religious people, the highly-educated theologians who got it wrong."

The Archbishop then quoted our Lord's words: "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent," and continued to say that "Without Him and the power of His Divinity, His disciples would have had nothing to preach. Faced with sin, disease and death, they would have been impotent without the human divine Christ." (Excerpt from an English magazine "The National Message" (August 1977).

I agree with Mrs Gibson that the scientific examining of the Bible can be overdone. Theological textbooks can be most depressing when they shake the faith. Best to go straight to the Divine Source Book — the Living Word.

However, there is one book on Christian doctrine which is tremendously useful, because we do not want to remain "babes in Christ" but to grow in understanding. It is called "In Understanding the Bible" by T. C. Hammond (Inter-Varsity Press) and obtainable at the Scripture Union Bookshop. With this foundation, a Christian has much to protect him from many subtle errors that are rife in the world today.

It grieves me that the Old Testament is so sadly neglected in modern times, yet the New is completely founded upon it. What can equal the glorious passages and prophecies of Isaiah? It seems to me it was our Lord's favourite book, and with His stamp upon it, and on other Old Testament Scriptures, what do we want with so-called "higher criticism" and men's analysis when the

Women's issues need for great care

Sir,
This may be hard to believe, but I am glad to see those who believe that it would be wrong to ordain women tell us so and why they think so. All I wish is that they would, if only for their own sakes, do so in such a way as to allow themselves a dignified retreat when they change their minds.

I say "when" rather than "if" because, as I said at the recent session of Sydney Synod, Christian history shows that believers seeking the guidance of the Spirit do not long adhere to interpretations of Scripture that make God appear unjust, once their consciences are enlightened on a particular issue.

The change of minds about ordaining women has come a long way since the 1968 Lambeth Conference. It has come some distance even among Sydney Evangelicals. If anyone had said five years ago that the bishop who informed Sydney Synod that he approved of ordaining women in certain limited circumstances was going to say that in 1977, he would have been laughed at.

"Appeals to creation ordinances are indicators of transcultural principle. If any biblical principles transcend local customary limits they are principles drawn from the structure of creation. To set principles aside as local command to Noah to increase and multiply, the sin of Onan in Genesis 38, etc, etc, took about thirty years to go down the drain into oblivion.

Let us not forget that most Evangelicals of all denominations thought these principles just as fundamental as some of us today think the principles of male headship and subordination within the Trinity to be.

So please let us be careful what we say and how we say it. We may find ourselves having to unsay it sooner than we think.

Divine command or human custom

Sir,
Concerning the ordination of women to the priesthood, I would like to quote the following principles of Biblical interpretation from an article entitled "Divine Command or Human Custom" by R. C. Sproul in the "Christian Reader" Nov/Dec 1976.

"We must be careful to distinguish between institutions the Bible merely recognizes and those the Bible positively institutes and endorses".

"To put the Biblical structure of the home on a par with society's perverse practice of slavery is to obscure the vast difference between the two". (See Ephesians 5:22 to 6:9).

Renewable sources of energy, such as the sun, wind and waves (all basically solar) could have only limited uses.

For Third World countries, the "alternative" or "soft" technologies often suggested would be expensive and only temporary measures. Ultimately, their problems could only be solved by maintaining technological and economic buoyancy in developed countries and sharing with them both equipment and expertise.

For Australians the world energy crisis still had an air of unreality, but it had already arrived in many places, including Europe, Japan and the US.

Rather than being suspicious of modern high technology, Christians ought to realise that it was itself a by-product of the "search for truth" which was fostered in the main by the Judeo-Christian ethic.

"The spirit which pervades most workers in the field of modern science and technology is not an egotistical, proud, God-displacing attempt to elevate human intellect to divine status but, in the main, a genuine concern to provide for mankind in an increasingly turbulent and difficult environment."

custom is the worst kind of relativizing and dehistoricizing of biblical content". (See 1 Corinthians 11:1-16).

"The principle of uncertainty and humility applies where we have biblical mandates whose nature remains uncertain as to custom and principle after arduous exegesis...

"Would it be better to treat a possible custom as a principle and be over-scrupulous in our design to obey God; or would it be better to treat a possible principle as a custom and demote a transcendent requirement of God to the level of a human convention: I hope the answer is obvious."

I trust this adds something to the continuing debate.

Subjection of wife to husband

Sir,
In an article "Love, Honor and Obedy" by Elisabeth Elliott the following points are made on the subject of the woman's place. I Quote...

(1) "You can't make proper use of a thing unless you know what it was made for." In Genesis 2:18-25 we read that the purpose of woman's creation was to be a companion and help to man. The NT reaffirms this purpose in 1 Corinthians 11:8, 9.

(2) Sin resulted when woman took the initiative in an area which had far-reaching spiritual consequences.

"We have no way of knowing whether a consultation with her husband first might have led to an entirely different conclusion."

Things may have been different had Eve said: "Let me not be like God. Let me be what I was made to be — a woman."

(3) "The fact that I am a woman does not make me a different kind of Christian, but the fact that I am a Christian does make me a different kind of woman."

(4) "Obedience to the will of God is no more a sign of weakness in woman than it was in the Son of Man when he said 'Lo I come — to do thy will, O God,' otherwise we would have to conclude that obedience to Christ demands the suicide of the personality and is a sign of weakness. Submission for the Lord's sake does not amount to servility. It does not lead to self-destruction, the stifling of gifts, personhood, intelligence and spirit."

(5) "For the Christian who believes that the traditional patriarchal order is not merely cultural and sociological but has its foundations in theology, it is interesting to discover that it also has a valid biological foundation."

(6) "Marriage is used in the OT to express the relation between God and his covenant people and in the NT between Christ and the church. No effort to keep up with the times, to conform to modern social movements or personality cults authorises us to invert this order. Tremendous heavenly truths are set forth in a wife's subjection to her husband and the use of this metaphor in the Bible cannot be accidental."

MAURICE BETTERIDGE SPENDING FIVE WEEKS IN KENYA AND TANZANIA

The Federal Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, Rev Maurice Betteridge, left for overseas on October 18 for 10 weeks. Following a brief visit to the Church in Iran, he will be spending five weeks in Kenya and Tanzania. This tour will coincide with the Jubilee Celebrations of the Diocese of Central Tanganyika.

He will be consulting with the Bishops of the Church in both Kenya and Tanzania as well as meeting Australian missionaries and their national colleagues. Mr Betteridge says that it is essential that if partnership in mission is to be a reality, that we sit down and talk together of the tasks God has called us to share.

Later, Mr Betteridge will be making a brief visit to Germany to meet with executives of the Vereinigte Evangelische Mission and others associated in the German Churches Consultative Committee for Indonesia.

In Holland he will meet the heads of mission boards and the Dutch Inter-Church Co-ordination Committee for Development Projects (ICCO). These contacts will be of value because of the Society's increasing commitment to the Churches in Indonesia.

In England, he will be meeting the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society, and discussing the recent Report of the Working Party on the Relationship of the Church of England and the Missionary Societies. He will then visit Lima, Peru, where CMS has two missionaries engaged in student work, and Fuller Theological Seminary in Los Angeles where two of the Society's missionaries are on study leave.

The last stop will be at Fiji to see something of the work of Lotu Pasifika, the Pacific Conference of Churches' publishing house, to which Miss Betty Durham has been located as a consultant.

RESOURCE BOOK ON HOMOSEXUALITY

The current world wide controversy on homosexual demands for complete equality, has led Dr Jean Benjamin of Sydney to produce a detailed Resource Paper for public distribution and study, entitled "Homosexuality — Its Victims — and the Value of Legal Deterrence".

Outrageous homosexual demands for complete equality, recognition, acceptance and promotion of their Gay Liberation (Sad Bondage) life-style has brought them into head-on collision with family-loving parents, clergy and teachers.

Recent controversies have included the successful Anita Bryant "Save our Children" Campaign in the USA and the Mary Whitehouse blasphemy case in the UK; and the amended proposals, Section 59, the NSW Anti-discrimination Act. Homosexual lobby groups have also been very active in South Australia, Victoria and the ACT, to bring about changes to the sodomy laws.

The so-called Gay Liberation Movement has now dropped all pretence concerning its ultimate aims as now revealed in their main Australian homosexual newspaper, QUOTE: "Any legislative change — the word 'reform' is inappropriate — which merely enacted the 'consenting-adults-in-private' formula would be a fraud: mere window dressing abnormal, unnatural, equality." ("Campaign" August, 1977, edition No 23, Page 5).

This impossible claim for complete equality between the traditional normal heterosexual sex-style and the homosexual perversion, is the basis for their new demands for the recognition of homosexual marriages. (ie between two males).

It has finally culminated in their sick demands for the legal right of two male homosexual parents to adopt babies from the Child Welfare Department. (An actual application has been made in South Australia!)

by Lesley Hicks

ENOUGH IS ENOUGH

At times I feel myself a stranger in alien territory in our large local department store. Acres and acres of carpeted floors, islands of glossy goods, notices at all eye-levels urging me to buy... buy... buy...! All that colossal super-abundance, available, for a fee, for transfer from the emporium to my home. So much I might want, so little I really need.

True, one needs new clothes from time to time, and household goods, and of course (worst luck!) one has to eat. Shopping is inescapable. For things other than the bread-and-butter necessities of life it can be quite fun. There is the pleasurable anticipation of owning something new. Special satisfaction if it's a bargain, or something for which we've saved up long.

DANGER IN STORE

For those very reasons, there are few places more dangerous to me in a spiritual sense than that department store. It's so difficult to keep a sense of perspective and responsibility in it as a Christian seeking to live sensitively and responsibly to a needy world. The values of the great god "Gimme" threaten to crowd in and crush me when I am in his temple among his devotees.

These values impinge on our children too, in shops, but even more in our own living room through TV advertising, and through comparison with what their friends have. In a light-hearted way (heavy-handed solemnity) we can try to help each other resist the "gimme" pressures, and analyse the ads to see where we are being got at.

I was interested and pleased that questions were raised in Sydney's recent Synod about the Church's handling of its wealth. Inevitably, a committee has Taylor takes a serious look at population control — a controversial topic as always — and at projections of the world's likely future. Like Toftler's "Future Shock", and many another book in recent years, "Enough is Enough" is grimly pessimistic about the way our world is lurching on into doomsday — population, pollution, energy shortages, atomic arsenals, and the unequal distribution of wealth are all potential bombs which, singly or in various combinations, could blast mankind into extinction.

THE LIMITS OF GROWTH

The assumption of the "have" countries that our standard of living must keep on rising in a growth economy is severely questioned. Taylor quotes an American economist James Weaver: "If all of us decided that our homes were adequate, our cars satisfactory, our clothing sufficient, our present sort of economy would collapse tomorrow. For it is built on the assumption man's wants are insatiable."

That brings me back to myself bemused in the middle of Grace Bros. "The problem passengers on Space-ship Earth are the first-class passengers and no one else", according to E. F. Schumacher; I and my family and, I suspect, most of my readers in the "Record" are middle class Australians. As we are unconsciously rich by the world's standards, and "of him to whom much is given, much shall be required."

BEWARE HYPOCRISY
As I write this, well-fed and comfortable in our reasonably pleasant home, bare feet caressing carpet, I am aware of the danger of hypocrisy.

LESSON FROM MANNA

Taylor challenges us Christians, at least, to simplify our life-styles; to be vocal in questioning the "gimme" values of our society. In a thoughtful chapter on "The Theology of Enough", he shows the biblical framework: that condemnation of excess, of covetousness and greed, that runs through both the Old Testament and the New.

He quotes St Paul, writing to the Gentile Christians about the collection for famine-stricken Jewish Christians: "There is no question of relieving others at the cost of hardship to yourself; it is a question of equality. At the moment your surplus meets their need, but one day your need may be met from their surplus. The

ST MARK'S DARLING POINT TO CELEBRATE 125 YEARS OF SERVICE

On Sunday morning, November 6, the 11 am service at St Mark's, Darling Point, will be a special celebration of thanksgiving. It will commemorate the first service held in the church 125 years ago, on November 7, 1852.

Sir Laurence Street, Chief Justice and Lieutenant-Governor, and Sir William McMahon, a former Prime Minister, will read the Lessons. Canon James Whild, who has been Rector since 1964, will preach.

It is anticipated that many people whose families have been associated with St Mark's for a number of years will be present at the service.

On the following day a commemorative dinner will be held in the Parish Hall.

A feature of this will be a panel of people who will answer questions on Christianity. Members of the panel will be The Hon R. J. Elliott, QC, MP, The Rev Dr Alan Cole, Dr John Geates, Mrs J. Hazlitt and The Rev Bruce Wilson.

The beginning of St Mark's goes back to 1848, when the foundation stone was laid. During the four years while the church was being built, services were held in an old coachhouse, near Ruscutters Bay.

The church was designed by Edmund Blacket and, largely because of its beautiful architecture, it has become one of the most popular churches in Sydney for weddings.

However, parishioners associate it with many other activities. Among these are five services held every Sunday, in addition to Sunday School, four Bible study groups (dating back to the 1959 Billy Graham Crusade), considerable interest in and support for overseas missions and an Outreach Committee which arranges local hospital visiting, a monthly Healing Service and special functions for the purpose of evangelism.

ORDER AND EQUALITY

Trinity and Order in Relationship

God, the ultimate ground of reality, is Trinity. God is one, not three gods but one, and yet God is Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

The Father, who created the world and who sent the Son, the Son, who redeemed the world and has raised humanity to the throne of God by Himself becoming man, and the Spirit of God, who relates Himself to each one of us who are His children, Spirit to spirit in friendship and fellowship.

The knowledge of God's character as Trinity is given to us by God Himself. We would never have guessed at it by ourselves, but once we know it, it throws a wonderful light on the world and human structures.

One of the puzzling problems that has vexed philosophers for ages is the relationship of the one and the many which we see within the world but with the knowledge of the Trinity, we recognise that this is a sign of God's own nature. He is one but three persons bound together in the closest relationship.

There is order in the Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Spirit and so there is order in the created world, as is plainly to be seen in the different species, created each in its order rising up to humanity as its apex. This order is a reflection of the nature of God Himself. Similarly there is order in human relationships and God's nature gives us the key to understanding this order. Although there is no superiority, Father, Son and Spirit are equal though they stand in an order to each other. And of course there is no dominance but only a relationship of love.

We read in the Bible "The Father loves the Son and has given Him everything" and Jesus the Son said "I do always that which pleases Him".

Men and women have been created in an order. Though they are equal, they stand in an order of relationship. There is an order of headship and response which reflects the character of God.

The world in general and humanity in particular have been created by God and all that fills the earth is His glory, that is, it makes clear His character.

Our homes should reflect this order, which is part of the character of God: and especially the Christian congregation should reflect and not contradict this order because the Christian congregation is public, in a way the home is not.

The outsider should be able to see God's character reflected in the way the congregation orders itself in our life, from this learning the order God has given humanity as a reflection of His own order within the Trinity.

In this way the congregation of God will be a blessing to society, setting the example of how it should order its own life, and how each home within society should order itself according to the will and perfect plan of God.

That is why the controversy about the ordination of women is such an important one really, more important than might seem at first sight.

It is not a question of equality — men and women are of course equal — and it is not a question of dominance because no Christian should dominate another, but it is a question of order reflecting the order of creation which God has given as a reflection of His own order within His own nature.

The Bible gives the key when it says that "the head of every man is Christ, the head of woman is the man and the head of Christ is God."

Man's headship means that he should serve women, if only by standing up for them in the bus, and the order of the congregation should acknowledge God's created order in humanity and not turn it topsy-turvy, for if we destroy order in the congregation we will destroy order in the Christian home with the great sadness that will bring, and we will also set an example which will destroy order in society.

God is Trinity. We may not understand all that that means but it is absurd to say that the doctrine is incomprehensible, as some Christians do, because nothing that God has revealed is incomprehensible. There is equal but order in the person of the Trinity.

This is the key for human relationships, for the relationships in the congregation, in the home and in society. It is very important that the congregation should reflect this principle of equality and order which is basic to reality itself.

work out in their relationship the God-given principles of the authority of the husband in the home, and the submission of the wife to her husband. This pattern, founded on love, commitment and willingness to sacrifice for the welfare of the other, brings new joy and growth to their relationship.

In becoming proud parents of twin boys they were convinced that the Biblical pattern of discipline and authority must again be applied in child-raising and "the training of a child in the way he is to go." Within this framework love, encouragement, affection and praise enable the child's personality to flower.

This is a book for all young Christian families who are seeking to build their family relationships on the biblical pattern. The principles are worked out through the life experiences of Judy and Mike, both their failures and triumphs, which make a very readable and helpful story.

PAUL WHITE AUTOBIOGRAPHY ON ABC

Dr Paul White, whose numerous Jungle Doctor books have been translated into more than seventy languages, will be reading excerpts from his autobiography on ABC Radio in the week beginning October 31.

The 15-minute readings can be heard on ABC Radio 2 and 3 at 10.20 am on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, as part of the usual By the Way series.

Dr White recently gave up his medical practice to devote himself fully to writing and broadcasting, and his autobiography, Alias Jungle Doctor, was published this year.

It is the warm story of a young married couple from their getting to know each other as teenagers, to their becoming parents of twins.

During these vital years of their lives they experience a drifting apart in their marriage. As they realize this drift they are challenged to repentance by the conviction of the Holy Spirit and by making us want to turn away from our sin", p 146.

In the preface the author tells us that his aim is to "say everything that was necessary to help people who really want to know God". This, in my opinion, has been fulfilled.

The book contains three sections: Man's Problem, God's Answer, Man's Response. The Chapters (13 in all) are short with easy-to-read paragraphs with good helpful headings.

At $5.95 (hard back) it is a fairly expensive "give-away" book.

PROTECTION OF THE FAMILY UNIT EVERYONE'S CONCERN

It can not be stated too clearly or strongly that the basic unit for a stable social structure is the family; and a Christian family is the ideal which the Church has always sought to maintain.

Husband, wife, and children, living in the same home, sharing the same joys and sorrows, growing up and growing older at the same pace, provide the best human bulwark in a world of ever changing patterns.

When a bride and bridegroom come to a church for their marriage, they want to share in a service that will remain in their memories as one of singular happiness. They know that they are to exchange vows of love with life-long intent in the Name of the Triune God; that prayer will be offered on their behalf before God's throne of grace; and that they will receive encouragement from God's Word to rejoice in "the mutual society help, and comfort that the one ought to have of the other, both in prosperity and in adversity".

And when true love exists between bride and bridegroom, the last thing they would willingly tolerate in their marriage service would be any self-deception, any sham or hollow spirit, any note that lacks in reality.

Marriage in the true sense of that term will provide support for each partner in a way no other human relationship affords; economic, social, emotional, psychological and spiritual support which will act as "a first line of defence in times of crisis or strain" and will preserve human values in a small home circle in spite of the pressures of mass living.

When children are added to the life of that home, it will increase in strength as a basic social unit and add to the joy of all its members. The fellowship and affection of a Christian family has been one of the most valuable features of our national heritage.

That was strenuously denied; but time has proved it to be all too true. Marriage in any place, and in any circumstances, has never been so easy to arrange, while divorce has increased at a greatly accelerated pace. It was announced by the past Attorney General that the 30 judges who serve on the Family Court of Australia will be strengthened by the appointment of six more judges within 12 months because of the steady increase in the number of divorce applications.

This will make the Family Court the largest single Court in Australia; and this does not include the five judges who serve the Family Court of Western Australia.

But this was no more than the tip of an iceberg. There have always been some people in our society who have argued for a more substantial diminution of the Christian ethic which by and large has been written into our laws.

But a new phase rapidly developed when the Labor Party won the Federal Election in December, 1972. One strand in the Labor majority was made up of men who actively represent the amoral and agnostic political philosophy of the Humanist Society.

What this meant in terms of Government policy was made clear in the claim that the basic patterns of our society would be radically and permanently changed by the legislative programme which was forecast for the next three years in office.

I am not speaking about

"The Government should be concerned to support and strengthen Australian family life in every possible way"

Socialist ideals, or foreign policies, or economic programmes; I refer only to that aspect of Government action and legislation which temporary or permanent basis; such casual relationships may not attract a great deal of notice, but one party or the other is at great risk should an eventual break-down occur. But the kind of legislation which was mooted would have gone much further in order to allow other forms of relationships such as homosexual or lesbian marriage and even incestuous association; and such couples would have been granted full rights in law on such matters as inheritance and adoption.

But there has been a long-standing demand for medical advice or assistance in the case of many women in the community. The hard working social worker may find herself in the midst of human issues where the Church is not found at all; she needs support and encouragement in dealing with acute human problems. It is unfortunate, to say the least, that some groups have set out to exploit this need in order to promote altogether different interests. A series of cartoons drawn by Meg Smith shows how an abortion referral service led on to a demand for a women's crisis centre. Application was made to the Federal Government for a financial subsidy in view of the promise to help community efforts, and this was made available through The Australian Hospitals and Health Services Commission.

As a result the Leichhardt Women's Community Health Centre was established in March 1974 and the Liverpool Women's Health Centre a few months later. Both centres are funded by Government moneys, although there has been a change in the way the subsidy is administered.

The present Federal Government makes a block grant to the State Government and the NSW

Health Commission is responsible for its distribution. The grant to the two women's centres was at first reduced, but has been restored to the original amount on the Premier's personal instructions.

The annual grant for the two centres for the year 1976-77 was $293,999; the total subsidy from 1974 to 1977 amounts to $743,744. The philosophy which lies behind these centres is revealed in the literature which has sprung up with them. The Australian Union of Students has published a book called Sexuality; it was prepared by the Victorian Australian Union of Students Women's Collective. Page 4 records their thanks to the Leichhardt Women's Community Health Centre which was responsible for a substantial part of the book. It advocates promiscuity, lesbianism, and other activities as acceptable sex-styles.

This book has been sold to school girls and can only be thought of as propaganda calculated to disturb and destroy the inherited moral standards and values of our nation.

Other literature makes liberal use of degrading language and openly encourages recourse to abortion. It should be a matter of grave concern that clinics and centres which ought to be available for the ordinary woman at a time of crisis should lend themselves to philosophies and propaganda which serve totally different purposes.

It is true that in a pluralist society, any group has a right to put forward their views and, when they are legitimate, to seek Government assistance.

But it is an anomaly to think that money should be made available to fund centres which are actively promoting drastic change in normal human relationships. There is little doubt that the aim of this philosophy is to change the law and to re-structure society. Women in need of care should not be used as pawns on the political chess-board nor as means to promote radical change in social philosophy.

The main victims are the children who are brought up in an emotional environment which is lacking in the stability that is imperative for a wholesome adult future. It would be much better if Government subsidies were transferred to Government hospitals where professional care can be provided without political or ideological motivation.

The Government should be concerned to support and strengthen Australian family life in every possible way to enable families to meet the economic and social stresses and changes of today. This means that the Government should refuse to sponsor any legislation which will promote or condone alternate life and sex styles.

Archbishop Sir Marcus Loane

aimed at fundamental alteration in pre-traditional and recognised forms of human relationship.

It was said that Sweden is the most enlightened and liberal country in the world in its attitude towards or acceptance of a variety of life-styles; that the Family Law Act would give Australia the most advanced legislation on that particular subject in any country other than Sweden; and that it ought to be seen as the first step in a much larger programme which would legalise a variety of human relationships.

There have always been de facto husbands and wives in our community, couples living together on a

The Bishop Speaks Out ... on marriage

"A psychologist recently bewailed that most men take more care in choosing a car than in choosing a wife. Current figures in Australia seem to bear this out. Though our marriage rate is increasing, so also is our divorce rate. The number of Australian divorces in 1976 was about half the total number of marriages in the same year."

"This can be attributed in part to the first eighteen months of the easier divorce provisions of the family law bill. But it also reflects a lack of proper thought and preparation on the part of many entering marriage."

"The world psychologist I quoted went on to say that many a man will choose a car after comparing models and performance figures of various vehicles; yet many a wife is chosen on the basis of 'love at first sight'."

It is expected that this work will become of paramount importance in the diocese so the council will comprise the Bishop, the Auxiliary Bishop in his role as Director of Christian Education, the Archdeacon in his responsibility for parish development, a priest from each deanery and the Pastoral Care chairman for each deanery as well as the Canon Missioner.

ENGLISH CHURCH TO LOOK AT MINISTRY OF DEACONS AND DEACONESSES

The Advisory Council for the Church's Ministry (ACCM) has just issued an "informatory document" to help General Synod members prepare for their November debate on the ministry of deacons and deaconesses.

The report presents three possible courses of action for the Church to take, but does not offer any recommendations. However, one purpose of publishing the report so far in advance of the debate is to give Synod members the opportunity to send ACCM their comments, and it may be that some definite advice and suggestions will be made nearer the time.

The latest ACCM report summarises the history of deacons and deaconesses in the Anglican Communion and discusses their position in other Churches. "In the context of plans for re-union (eg the Ten Propositions) it is important that any debate on the diaconate take into account the ways in which it is being discussed and exercised outside the Church of England," the report declares. The three possible solutions to the debate on the diaconate as presented by the ACCM document are: • that the diaconate be retained as a short and intermediate stage which all candidates for the priesthood pass through; • the diaconate may be discontinued;

ACC APPEALS TO EGYPT

The Australian Council of Churches has called on the Egyptian Government to respect the human rights of all religious groups in Egypt by:

Allowing freedom of religion and removing discrimination against any person or group on the ground of religion; deterring any attempt to adopt the Koranic Code as the law of the land; removing all restrictions on Christian authors and writers who wish to defend their faith against what is written or broadcast in attack; and by allowing people of all religions the right to enrol in the universities and institutions of higher learning. The ACC has also written to the Secretary General of the United Nations requesting the UN to investigate the reported denial of human rights in Egypt on the grounds of religious beliefs and practices. Concern for the plight of Christians in Egypt, where the Government is expected to reintroduce the Koranic code soon, was brought before the ACC by one of its member churches, the Coptic Orthodox Church. The majority of Egypt's eight million Christians, out of a total population of 38 million people, are members of the Coptic Church. There is fear that the enforcement of Koranic Law will inevitably lead to either the massacre of groups of Christians or their enslavement.

Chinese service at Cathedral

Cantonese, Mandarin and English were used at the 5th Anniversary of the Anglican Chinese Fellowship in the context of Morning Prayer at St Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney, on Sunday, 9th October.

It was attended by Chinese from mainland China, Hong Kong, Singapore and Australia. Some were descendants of the Chinese in Australia during the gold-rush days. Others were recent immigrants. Lessons were read in Cantonese and English. Prayers led by the Reverend John Wu were in Cantonese and by the Reverend Ray Flatiau in Mandarin. Hymns were sung in English and Chinese languages and an anthem by the Fellowship with typical Chinese music was sung, based on an ancient Chinese pentatonic tune.

The address was given by the Dean, the Very Reverend Lance Shilton, in English and translated into Cantonese by Mr Samuel Au, a lay reader from Hong Kong as they stood together in the Cathedral pulpit. The Dean said, "We join in prayer for Chinese Christians on the mainland of China. Our knowledge of their needs has been small since the Communist massive take-over in 1949. "God must especially love the Chinese because He made so many of them! One-third of the world's population is Chinese!" He spoke on the text from 1 Peter 5:6 "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that in due time he may exalt you."

"It is always a humbling experience to come into a Cathedral. The large dimensions of the building, the volume of the organ and the massive pillars remind us of the mighty power of our great God. Compare this with our smallness and our desperate need. Worship in a Cathedral reminds us that we are to humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God. "The words, 'humble yourselves' come as a command to those who claim to be Christians. Let me illustrate. You are in need of physical treatment so you consent to becoming a patient of a particular surgeon. You submit yourself to his operating hand. You hope in due time to enjoy the promised benefit. "Christians are actively to put themselves under the mighty hand of God if they want His blessing. God exalts those who humble themselves. "The world today, irrespective of class, culture or country needs humbly to accept the message of God's care as shown so clearly on the Cross of Christ." The Dean also said, "He cares for you" expressed the belief which is at the heart of Christianity. "It is central to the message of the Bible. Some other religions with their many ceremonies try to make the gods care."

"I remember visiting a Hindu temple in South India. There was a loud noise from the clanging of symbols, the ringing of bells, the beating of drums and chanting of voices. I was told that the purpose was to wake up the gods so that they might hear the prayer. But the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is always fully alert to our needs. He doesn't have to be awakened. He cares for each one. He is more ready to hear than we are to pray."

Members of the Fellowship provided Chinese refreshments in Sydney Square to the delight of the whole congregation. The Chinese Anglican Fellowship began on February 27, 1972 with monthly meetings in the home of a member. From October 1, 1972 it met monthly at St Paul's Church, Chatswood. From March 6 this year, the Fellowship has met each Sunday at St Andrew's Cathedral. In the Chapter House the Services have been in Cantonese. In the Cathedral the members of the Fellowship have joined with the members of the Cathedral congregation in cross-cultural communication in Christ.

PROTESTORS DISRUPT RALLY AT ALL SOULS'

A rally organised by the Festival of Light in Great Britain and held at All Souls', Langham Place, was disrupted by gay activists necessitating police intervention.

According to reports in the English Church Press, police had to be called in to restore order.

The rally was organised by The National Festival of Light to highlight the positive help that is available to homosexuals seeking to overcome their problem.

They retaliated with a demonstration that brought the police clomping down the aisles to supervise the removal of homosexuals who included two Anglican clergymen.

BISHOPS SPEAK OUT ON SEC STRIKE

A joint statement released recently by the Bishop of Sale, the Right Rev'd Arthur F. Fox, and the Bishop of Gippsland, the Right Reverend Graham Delbridge commented on the recent strike by SEC workers.

The statement recognises that the ravages of inflation have caused "the constriction of relativities of skilled workers". It also points out that losses suffered by farmers have been greater. "Average income per farm has dropped 40% in the past few years."

While the Bishops praise the constructive role of the ACTU they also ask if it would have been better to use its machinery at an earlier stage "in the solution of major nation-wide disputes."

"There is no doubt that the conduct of the recent dispute was profoundly influenced by some leaders who believe in revolutionary rather than in constitutional courses of action. "We are convinced that relationships between all sections of the community will be correct only when Christian principles of justice and charity are brought to play in every aspect of life, including the industrial and commercial."

"Whatever the final judgement of the Arbitration Commission, it is clear that any wage gain will fall far short of the sacrifices which those on strike inflicted both on themselves and on others. "It should prove once and for all that shop committees cannot successfully pursue wage claims unless they are prepared to deprive everybody in the State of all power over a long period — whether for industry for

ARCHBISHOP'S O'SEAS FUND AIMS TO HELP UGANDAN REFUGEES

The special target for the Archbishop of Sydney's Overseas Relief Fund in 1977-78 is the care and resettlement of refugees fleeing from the Amin regime in Uganda.

This, in the opinion of the Archbishop of Sydney, Sir Marcus Loane, is the most significant aid problem facing the world at this present time.

Archbishop Loane, launching the 1977-78 Overseas Relief Fund recently, said: "Information reaching us from Bishop Festo Kivengere who left Uganda just after Archbishop Luwum was killed, and from groups such as African Evangelistic Enterprise, confirms that thousands of Ugandans — many of them Christians — have had to flee from their country because of the present repressive regime.

"There is no doubt that wholesale slaughter has been carried out by President Amin's Security Forces and that Christian tribes and villages have been a prime target.

"The result is that many thousands of people have left the country, taking nothing with them, and in many cases walking for days over the mountains to Kenya.

"The Anglican Archbishop of Uganda, the Most Rev Festo Olang, has a fund which helps to settle refugees in temporary villages and camps organised by the Kenya Government. Their need for clothes, books and basic living supplies is immense, and it is my earnest hope that Australian Christians will feel they can give generously to meet these needs."

Parish churches throughout the Diocese of Sydney will next weekend give out 20,000 copies of "Southern Cross" magazine which carries the theme of overseas aid and development.

The Overseas Relief Fund in the last 18 months has made grants totalling $42,000 to particular emergencies in Guatemala, Beirut, India, Addis Ababa, Italy, Hong Kong, Philippines, Nepal, Dacca, Solomons, Roumania and Papua New Guinea.
