Reformation at Stake Today

REV. LESTER PFANKUCK, author of this article, is vicar of St. John's, Woolston, and rural dean of East Christchurch, New Zealand. He is also the editor of the New Zealand Evangelical Churches' Fellowship and was formerly Scripture Union Secretary in South-East Asia.

A problem is to answer this question, a problem: what must be the nature of this reformation? Do we expect that the church will be able to resist any of these pressures? Do we expect that it will be able to answer this question, a problem? What is the nature of this reformation? Do we expect that the church will be able to resist any of these pressures? Do we expect that it will be able to answer this question, a problem?

They Say

"Most of us grudgingly admit that the single holy purpose of the history of the church is to prove God's power, and that the single holy purpose of the life of the church is to prove God's love. In either case, our task is to show the world that God is present and active in the world. This is our task, and we must accept it if we are to be honest with ourselves."

Reformation and renewal

by Dr Keith Cole, Vice-Principal of Ridley College, University of Melbourne.

On the 31st October 1517 Martin Luther nailed his memorable ninety-five theses to the door of the castle church at Wittenberg.

So it is possible that those were not particularly revolutionary pronouncements; they are rather called for about the year of 1212, when the great papal bull of the Fourth Lateran Council was given out. All the great papal bulls of the fourteenth century followed on the strength of that one, until the whole of the Roman Catholic Church became subject to the Rule of Faith. Luther challenged the Pope's authority, as well as the authority of the Church's hierarchy, and the foundation of the entire Roman Catholic Church was shaken. He therefore challenged the rule of faith.

The substitutionary nature of the atoning death of our Lord Jesus Christ was emphasised by the reformers, as was the satisfaction which his atoning death provided. This was due to the fact that the religion of the Bible was always a substitutional religion, with a strong emphasis on the adoption of the soteriology of man's salvation by faith in Christ. The doctrine of justification by faith, the doctrine of the substitutionary atonement of Christ, the doctrine of reconciliation of God to man through the death of Christ, and the doctrine of the merit of Christ's atoning death in the place of sin, are all closely connected.

The Supreme authority of the Bible

The Reformation was a reaction primarily against the suprema tion of man over the Bible, faith and the Church. The Pope was the supreme authority in the Church, and the Church was the supreme authority in all of society. This was reflected in the words of our Lord Jesus Christ: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." (Mark 4:9). No one could hear without the Church, and therefore no one could understand the Bible without the Church, as the Church read the Bible as the Word of God. The Church was the supreme authority in interpreting the Bible, the faith and all that pertained to the Church.

The Reformation was also a reaction against the suprema tion of the Pope over the Bible, faith and the Church. The Pope was the supreme authority in the Church, and the Church was the supreme authority in all of society. This was reflected in the words of our Lord Jesus Christ: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." (Mark 4:9). Reformation and renewal

by Dr Keith Cole, Vice Principal of Ridley College, University of Melbourne.

O n the 31st October 1517 Martin Luther nailed his memorable ninety-five theses to the door of the castle church at Wittenberg. In doing so he did not break with the Church but rather called for debate on a number of issues that were not particularly revolutionary but rather concerned the authority of the Pope and corrupt church practices. Luther's action, however, marked the beginning of the Protestant Reformation and had profound consequences for the Christian Church in general and the Church of England in particular.

The Reformation in England was prompted by a number of factors. The English court was being run on a lavish scale, which was not sustainable. The Church of England was heavily dependent on the revenue generated from tithes. The power and prestige of the Pope had diminished significantly over the centuries. The religious and social upheaval of the 16th century had created a climate of change and the Reformation was a response to these factors...

CROMWELL DISENTANGLED

AMBROSE MARSHALL

Cromwell's rule extended over three hundred years, but his influence has never been forgotten. He was a great leader, a man of principle, and an able administrator. His political and religious policies set the tone for the future of England and the world. This article attempts to disentangle the complexities of his rule and provide a clearer picture of his legacy.

ELIXER OF WALES

As a child, David Livingstone was introduced to the world of natural history. A contemporary letter writer from the Time mentioned the "inordinate curiosity" and "a natural inclination" to learn about the unknown. This curiosity was the catalyst for Livingstone's journeys to Africa, where he discovered the Nile and developed a greater understanding of the world. His work as a missionary and explorer earned him recognition as a great statesman and a hero of the faith.

SEPARATION

The doctrine of the church and state was a matter of great concern to early Christians. The union of church and state was a common practice in many regions, and the issue of separation of church and state was a source of great conflict. In this article, the author explores the history of the church and state relationship and provides insights into the current state of affairs.

FAITH AND FURTHER STUDIES

In this section, we explore the relationship between faith and further studies. The author examines the role of faith in intellectual development and the importance of further studies in nurturing faith. This article aims to provide a deeper understanding of the connection between faith and further studies.

They can only hope that something, someone will extend a hand of help. Someone, perhaps, to guide them some day. Someone, who has saved hundreds of boys. Homes run on compassion and charity, and for some of them this may be life, not only belongs but is wanted. The Charlotte Homes have helped and loved. I wonder what the waiting list is like. There is a desperate need for expansion. Some of you may not be able to help, but you can give some kind of advice and help in some way.

PRAYERS FOR REFORMATION SUNDAY

Almighty God, who through the preaching of your servants, the heralds of your Kingdom, have caused the light of the gospel to shine into all the world, as a beacon of grace, and a sign of your presence, and who in the gift of your Spirit have made you willing to hear the words of the prophets; we beseech you to send upon us the Spirit of your Holy Ghost, that we may receive inwardly what we hear outwardly; and so may be a living sacrifice and a holy temple in the thick of the world; grant that we may proclaim the mysteries of Christ publicly according to your Word. Amen.
